Boeing Names New Defense & Space Group Vice President Of Information Systems

The Boeing Company has named Don Darwin as the new Defense & Space Group vice president of Information Systems. Darwin replaces Terry Milholland, who recently was named chief information officer for Boeing.

Most recently, Darwin was the Boeing North American, Inc. director of Southern California Information Systems. He brings to the position more than 36 years of information and business systems experience at Boeing, Rockwell and McDonnell Douglas.

Darwin reports to Scott Carson, Defense & Space Group vice president. "His working together attitude, and business and information systems experience, will help us create our new integrated aerospace company," Carson said.
