

The Boeing 767-400ER: Leading the Way into the 21st Century

The Boeing 767-400ER: Leading the Way into the 21st Century

The Boeing 767-400ER with its all-new 777-style interior, new flight deck and innovative raked wing tips is the first new airplane to be introduced in the 21st century. The 767-400ER begins a world tour July 10, 2000 to 17 cities on three continents, and will be on display at the Farnborough Air Show in England from July 24-30. The airplane has a distinctive look, both inside and out, featuring illustrations from Greek mythology and drawings by Leonardo da Vinci. On its fuselage are the words "Leading the Way." These words were chosen because of the airplane's role in leading the way in technical innovation, market development, market preference, and passenger comfort. To see the airplane inside and out, visit the at website.

###

For further information:

Debbie Heathers

(206) 579-5159

Gary Lesser

(425) 342-4773
