New Flight Deck Being Studied For Boeing 767 Family

A new flat-panel flight deck for both the Boeing 767-200 and 767-300 is being studied and could be available as early as 2002. The design is the latest advance toward a common look and feel in the flight decks of all Boeing airplanes. The instrument panel display layout and format shown here on a 767-400ER (extended range) airplane are also common with the Boeing 777, yet retains the cost-saving crew commonality with all current Boeing 767s and 757s. The new flight deck also provides growth capacity for future system enhancements.

###

For further information:
Debbie Heathers
(206) 579-5159
Gary Lesser
(425) 342-4773