

First Boeing 777 for Alitalia Takes Shape in the Factory

In a Boeing factory near Seattle, the front section of fuselage for the first Alitalia Boeing 777-200ER jetliner is lifted into place and joined with other sections to form an airplane body. The airplane is scheduled for delivery to Rome-based Alitalia in August. Alitalia, the first Italian airline to purchase a new 777 from Boeing, has six of the airplanes on order. The fuselage of the 777-200ER, when fully assembled, is 63.7 meters long (209 feet, 1 inch). The Alitalia 777 will carry up to 291 passengers.

###

For further information:

Cheryl Addams

Seattle, Washington

(206) 766-2919

Nick Brough

Rome

39-06-482-4731

Ken DeJarlais

kenneth.r.dejarlais@boeing.com
